SPECIAL ISSUE

«INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF TRANSPORT ECONOMICS» (IJTE)

Title: Sustainability and Transport Economics: Multidisciplinary Approaches to Global Challenges

Description: This special issue of the «International Journal of Transport Economics» (IJTE) seeks to delve into the intricate relationship between sustainability and transport economics. As sustainability has become a pivotal topic across disciplines, its implications for transportation systems and policies have grown increasingly complex. This issue welcomes submissions that explore sustainability in the context of transport economics, examining how concepts like the circular economy, climate change, digitalization, energy policies, and sustainable urban development intersect with transportation systems globally.

The special issue calls for papers, particularly dedicated to the 2nd International Conference on Sustainability Analysis (ICSA), dealing with measuring sustainability and sustainable development in different areas with different statistical methods and approaches. Contributors from diverse fields – such as economics, statistics, environmental studies, and policy analysis – are encouraged to submit research on topics including sustainable transportation systems, the role of digitalization in reducing carbon footprints, responsible production and consumption in the transport sector, and the socio-economic impacts of sustainable mobility solutions. This special issue aims to foster a multidisciplinary dialogue that deepens the understanding of how transport economics can contribute to broader sustainability goals, including well-being, inequality reduction, and sustainable development in cities and communities.

Special Issue Editors:

- Professor Enrico Ivaldi, IULM University, Italy
- Professor Luca Persico, University of Genoa, Italy
- Professor Manuela Gonzales Relaño Reyes, Universidad de Sevilla, Spain
